Led by trained recovery coaches, these groups help people face challenges by being with others who are going through similar situations and providing information and encouragement. Recovery Coaching is a face-to-face or telephone service that considers a person's stage of recovery and helps to establish a recovery plan to identify and manage relapse warning signs and other issues critical to success in early recovery. Recovery coaches often work with persons after completion of addiction treatment to assist with a positive experience in early recovery and connect persons with additional resources if needed. Recovery coaches or Certified Peer Supporters are persons who have experienced stable recovery from mental illnesses and/or addictions for more than 2 years, and are trained to model a healthy recovery lifestyle. A person may have both a sponsor and a recovery coach, since their roles differ and cannot be spanned by any single person.
